

Course Rotation and Delivery Matrix

Discipline Area: Finance

I. Description of Course Rotation and Delivery Matrix

Each undergraduate and graduate course below may be offered in any modality subject to student needs (e.g. F-1 visa requirements) and administrative requirements (e.g. compliance with Higher Learning Commission and AACSB accreditation requirements).

The previously approved FIN 350 course allows for any course modality (face-to-face, hybrid, and fully online) to be offered in each semester. Additionally, the FIN curriculum committee carefully and strategically decided that at least 50% of the FIN 350 sections should be offered with in-person/on-campus content each semester.

Additionally, courses pending approval will allow for any course modality to be offered in each semester. The FIN curriculum committee will continue to consider student needs (e.g. F-1 visa requirements) and administrative requirements such as accreditation requirements and staffing needs to assure high-quality teaching, programming, and advising. Furthermore, the FIN curriculum committee will ensure that each course is offered in multiple modalities throughout the academic year (unless strictly offered in an online program such as the online MBA program) and ensure the majority of the courses have an in-person component given the BBA and MBA Finance concentration are listed as in-person programs.

The matrix below lists the modality in which each course could be offered in for each semester. It is presented in such a manner to ensure that the FIN curriculum committee can flexibly accommodate student and administrative requirements. The following are some examples of why it is important to maintain such flexibility.

- Programs with higher proportions of international students such as the interdisciplinary MBA program make it difficult to determine which course modality to offer in advance because other departments may offer online courses as well and inter-departmental scheduling communication is sparse. For example, if an international student registers for an online course from the Marketing department, then that hinders enrollment in any online course offered by the Finance discipline area due to F-1 visa requirements. Thus, the FIN curriculum committee would then offer the course in-person and vice versa.
- Staffing needs. Faculty on research leave, sabbatical, phased retirement, and/or in administrative roles present staffing challenges and, consequently, scheduling issues, especially given the Finance discipline area does not have a dependable pipeline of adjunct lecturers.
